

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR SEARCH ANNOUNCEMENT

Alaska Institute for Justice

WHO WE ARE

Established in 2005, Alaska Institute for Justice (AIJ) is an award-winning non-profit dedicated to protecting the human rights of all Alaskans, including immigrants, refugees, and Alaska Native communities. AIJ is on the frontlines of promoting justice and equity for underserved communities through three equity-focused programs:

- The Alaska Immigration Justice Project provides critical legal services to Alaska's immigrant and refugee communities, prioritizing legal representation for survivors of domestic violence, sexual assault, and human trafficking and those fleeing torture and persecution in their country of origin. AIJ has served over 7,000 legal clients since 2005.
- The Language Interpreter Center provides access to trained Alaska-based and national language interpreters and translators who remove communication barriers between legal, medical, and social service professionals and limited English proficient individuals. AIJ's Language Interpreter Center provides access to over 100 languages for non-profit, government, and private organizations across Alaska.
- The Alaska Climate Justice Program works with Alaska Native communities on climate adaptation and resilience, assisting communities in gaining access to the resources they need to become safe from the impacts of the climate crisis, and empowering them to advocate for the state and national policy-level changes needed to protect human rights, and promote and protect Tribal sovereignty.

AIJ upholds certain core values across all programs that drive the agency's mission and work in Alaska:

- We are committed to equity, justice and respect for the rights and dignity of all people;
- We work with integrity and accountability, and acknowledge our responsibility to our clients and the communities we serve;
- We pursue excellence and long-term sustainability for AIJ's work within Alaska, characterized by principles of shared values and team engagement.

THE OPPORTUNITY

AIJ seeks a transformative and inclusive leader with the experience, ability and optimism to grow and implement our vision for change in Alaska. The executive director will join our passionate, dynamic, and energetic team in a fast-paced and rewarding environment as we work across all program areas to promote human rights and justice.

AIJ's executive director will lead an organization that was brought into existence with community and statewide support working towards a vision to provide immigration, legal, and language access services to Alaskans.

While our office is located in Anchorage, our work takes us across the state to support remote coastal villages on the frontlines of the global climate crisis. We open our doors to people from around the world and welcome them to our country and community through our experienced immigration work. And we connect with our generous donors and philanthropic organizations across the United States who financially support our operations.

Our executive director will join this purposeful work to create visibility, promote justice, and support our collective vision, values, and priorities.

KEY RESPONSIBILITIES

The executive director reports to a board of directors, leads a staff of 16 full time employees, and is responsible for overall operations of AIJ including organizational leadership, grant writing and management, financial health, fund development and response to media requests, audits, agency insurance and other legal requirements, benefits management and payroll, working with AIJ's board, lease agreements, staffing, strategic planning, and all aspects of nonprofit management.

The executive director brings leadership experience to carry out, or be poised to grow into, the following key responsibilities:

- Serve as an effective spokesperson for AIJ, representing its programs, policies and communicating our vision and success stories to our funders, partners, and the general public. Develop new partnerships with funders and nonprofit organizations and obtain funding from private and public sources to advance AIJ's mission and grow its impact. Monitor the external environment related to AIJ's mission and recommend adaptations as needed.
- Develop the annual budget and lead financial oversight in collaboration with the management team and board treasurer, and give regular updates to the board. With senior staff, implement financial policies and systems in compliance with legal and financial standards. Oversee compliance with state and federal laws and grant regulations related to AIJ's legal and language access work.
- Provide strong leadership, partnership, and communication, in collaboration with board leadership, to ensure the board of directors and committees are effectively engaged to advance the organization's mission. Design learning opportunities for directors and staff in conjunction with key board committees. In partnership with the board president, provide directors with sufficient information to make sound policy, programmatic, and financial decisions as well as assure compliance with state and federal laws and regulations.
- Foster a transparent, authentic, and collaborative organizational culture where ethical policies are understood and lived out by board and staff. Cultivate an inclusive work environment that attracts and retains a diverse staff and management team. Guide staff to develop and implement programs and strategies aligned with AIJ's values, mission, and goals.

- Understand the policy issues affecting each of the three programs and advocate for policy-level change to address the injustices and inequities impacting the clients and communities AIJ serves.
